I retired as a PUSD teacher last June. During my tenure with the district, I've watched the housing market skyrocket to the point of being unaffordable to even middle class individuals and families within the area, let alone teachers working within the district. I think using surplus property within the PUSD as a housing incentive is an idea that will not only promote living in the area to families looking for quality education and affordable housing, but give the PUSD an edge on hiring new and highly qualified teachers as we face a statewide teacher shortage.
